PREFACE
PROPERTY OF THE
CITY OF NEW YORK

WHO'S WHO IN NEW YORK is compiled upon the lines of a London publication, which furnishes biographic data of prominent men the world over, and a Chicago publication which covers the same ground for the whole United States. Obviously, the wider range of these books precludes the mention of many names that have a definite and important interest when considered as factors in the life of this State.

This local information, so to call it, has never, up to this time, been gathered within the limits of a single volume, and those who have had occasion to look for such information realize how difficult it is to secure. It is to be found only in County histories of dubious veracity; in newspaper clippings difficult of access; in family histories overloaded with unimportant trivialities; or, in many instances, is not to be found at all. But, worst of all, when the alleged facts are gathered together they are found to be conflicting and the vital element of authenticity lacking. WHO'S WHO IN NEW YORK is authentic. The information has been gathered at first hand. It may be relied upon.

The readers of this volume will confer a great favor upon the L. R. Hamersly Company by suggesting the names of people who should be included herein, but who have, for various reasons, been omitted. No one can be more sensible than the Publishers of the sins of omission which may be properly laid at their door. One thing, however, they do pride themselves upon: the most severe critic of their work cannot say that any men or women have been included who do not deserve a place in this book. The error has been that of omission rather than commission.

ABARBANELL, Jacob E.:

Editor, author and playwright; born City of N. Y., Dec. 6, 1852; was educated in private and public schools, passing through the College of City of N. Y., receiving the degrees of A. B. and B. S. in 1872; then studied law at Columbia University, receiving the degree of LL.B. in 1874; while at Columbia he was also a teacher in both the day and night public schools in N. Y. City; after his admission to the Bar, practiced law for a number of years; he is a member of the Press, Manhattan, Single Tax and Pleiades Clubs, and of the Medico-Legal Society; he was married June 30, 1892, to Cornelia L. Eaton, and has one child, Ralph Royal Abarbanell, born Sept. 10, 1903. Address, 24 Vandewater St., N. Y. City.

ABBATT, William:

Author; son of William D. and Agnes A. (Dean) Abbott; born N. Y. City, Nov. 16, 1851; formerly editor and assistant editor of insurance journals, and occasional contributor to the press. Author: Crisis of the Revolution; Battle of Pell's Point; editor of Sargent's Life of Major Andre; Memoirs of General William Heath; Winfield's Block-House by Bull's Ferry; Codman's Arnold's Expedition to Quebec, and Mrs. E. F. Ellet's Women of the American Revolution. Member and former secretary of Quill Club. Address, 281 4th Ave., N. Y. City.

ABBE, Cleveland:

Meteorologist; born New York, Dec. 3, 1838; son of George Waldo Abbe and Charlotte Colgate; was graduated from the College of the City of N. Y., A. B., 1857, A. M., 1860; after graduation he taught for a year in the Trinity Church grammar school, but since then has confined himself to work in astronomy and meteorology; as director of the Cincinnati Astronomical Observatory, 1868-1873, he established a system of daily weather telegrams and a daily weather map for the whole country, with forecast of the weather for Cincinnati; this was done by co-operation with the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, the members of which united with Prof. J. A. Lapham of Milwaukee in urging upon the U. S. Congress the importance of a similar work for the benefit of the whole country; the national service was originally, in 1870, entrusted to Gen. Albert J. Myer, as the chief signal officer of the Army, but was transferred to the department of agriculture in 1891, and is now known as the U. S. Weather Bureau; Abbe's interest in this meteorological work was to a considerable extent the outcome of circumstances peculiar to his boyhood in N. Y. City, where the lectures of James P. Espy and Elias Loomis, the writings of William H. Redfield and Joseph Henry and the publication of long-range forecasts by Merriam, "The Sage of Brooklyn Heights," and especially the daily weather tables published by the telegraph companies as items of news, all conspired to arouse a great interest in the subject and convince many citizens that daily weather predictions would soon be feasible; in connection with his work in Cincinnati, Prof. Abbe published in the New York papers, during the winter of 1869-70, as also in the Chicago papers, letters showing his great hope that telegraphic weather work would be a benefit to the country, and would thereby gain the right to ask that the study of meteorology as a science be heartily supported by the universities; after the successful career of the weather bureau for over thirty years, he has still to regret that in his native city, whose commercial interests depend so much upon the weather, there has not yet been established a professorship of meteorology. Address, 2017 I St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

ALLEN, Viola:

Actress; gained her knowledge of the stage in the best school—that of experience; her father, C. Leslie Allen, a character actor of merit, and her mother, were in Alabama when she was born; during most of Miss Allen's childhood her parents were connected with the Boston Theatre Company; Miss Allen received her education in Boston; when she was about thirteen years old her parents moved to New York, where Miss Allen continued her schooling; when she was fifteen her debut on the stage was made; her father was a member of the company which was playing Esmeralda at the Madison Square Theatre in support of Annie Russell. Miss Russell retired rather unexpectedly from the cast, and by some chance Miss Allen got the part; a season on the road with Esmeralda proved that Miss Allen had in her the material from which good actresses are made; the next season she went with John McCullough, playing leading roles; this was the fatal season of the great McCullough, his last; with him she played a round of parts, including Virginia, Desdemona, Parthenia and Julia in The Gladiator; when Lawrence Barrett produced Browning's Blot on the Scutcheon, she was in the cast; then came, the following season, her engagement with the elder Salvini; her range of characters was widened here; she was Cordelia in Lear, Desdemona, Neodamis in the Salvini version of the Gladiator, and the wife in Le Mort Cville; when young Salvini played she was the Juliet to his Romeo; in 1888 Miss Allen became leading woman of the Boston Museum Stock Company; Bronson Howard's Shenandoah was put on, with Miss Allen in the leading feminine role; in 1889 she became a member of the Joseph Jefferson-William Florence combination, playing Lydia Languish to Jefferson's Acres and Florence's Sir Lucius O'Trigger in Sheridan's Rivals, and Cicely Home-spun to Jefferson's Doctor Pangloss and Florence's Zeke in The Heir at Law; Miss Allen signed with Charles Frohman as leading lady of the Empire Theatre Company, in 1893; she was seen in Bronson Howard's play, Aristocracy, and was later prominently identified with the great successes, The Masqueraders, Under the Red Robe, Liberty Hall and Sowing the Wind, in which she was the original Rosamond in this country; in 1898 Miss Allen first appeared as a star under the management of Liebler & Co., making a great and immediate success as Glory Quayle in The Christian by Hall Caine; her second production, in the Palace of the King, by F. Marion Crawford, proved equally fortunate, as was also her third star play, The Eternal City; after a season in the latter piece, Miss Allen turned her attention to Shakespeare, and began a series of brilliant classic revivals under the direction of her brother, C. W. Allen; the first being an elaborate production of Twelfth Night, in 1903, which proved artistically satisfying and financially profitable, and The Winter's Tale, in 1904, was likewise highly commended. Address, care C. W. Allen, New Amsterdam Theatre Building, N. Y. City.

ALLEN, William Frederick:

Meteorologist, editor; born Bordentown, N. J., Oct. 9, 1846; son of Col. Joseph Allen, a Civil Engineer and State Senator and Colonel of the Ninth New Jersey Regiment of Volunteers, who lost his life during the Civil War; educated at the Model School at Bordentown, N. J., and at the Protestant Episcopal Academy in Philadelphia, Penn.; shortly after his father's death, in 1862, he turned his attention to business, taking a position as rodman with the Camden & Amboy R. R. Co.; in 1863 was promoted Assistant Engineer; thereafter was engaged on several roads then in course of construction in New Jersey; and in 1868 was appointed Resident Engineer of the West Jersey Railroad company, and founded the town of Wenonah, N. J.; on Oct. 1, 1872, Mr. Allen became assistant editor of the Official Railway Guide, and in May, 1873, was made editor, and became also business manager of the National Ry. Publication Co.; in 1875, Mr. Allen was elected permanent secretary of the General Time Convention, composed of the principal trunk-line railways, represented by their general managers and superintendents, which then met to determine upon schedules of through trains on the Eastern and Western roads; in the following year he was elected secretary of the Southern Time Convention, consisting of the leading Southern railway lines; these conventions were consolidated in 1886, and from them the American Railway Association developed, and Mr. Allen became secretary of the association; the adoption of standard time, based upon the Greenwich hour meridians on a detailed plan proposed by him, was principally due to the efforts of Mr. Allen, and ultimately culminated in the adoption of Standard Time by the railway companies and by the people of the United States and Canada on Nov. 18, 1883; the same system has been adopted by other countries, and is now in use in Japan, in the Philippine Islands, Porto Rico, Australia, Germany, Austria, Sweden, Switzerland, Italy, Spain, Belgium, Holland, Roumania, Servia and part of Turkey, for which purpose a large amount of information was furnished by Mr. Allen; Mr. Allen was appointed by President Arthur one of five delegates who represented the U. S. at the International Meridian Conference, held at Washington in Oct., 1884; twenty-five nations were represented and the Greenwich meridian was adopted as the prime meridian and standard of time-reckoning; on April 22, 1890, he was elected an honorary member of the K. ARNOUX, William Henry:

Lawyer and jurist; born in the city of New York, is of French descent, his grandfather coming to this country in company with Count de Rochambeau during the Revolutionary War, in which he fought and was wounded; Judge Arnoux's father was brought by his parents to New York City while still a child, and here the son was born and received his education; the boy was precocious as a scholar, beginning to learn Latin at eight years of age, Greek at eleven, while at fifteen he was prepared to enter Princeton College; his father, however, preferring to bring him up to a mercantile life, placed him in a cloth house in New York, where he remained for four years; at the end of that time his father withdrew him from business and placed him to study law, and four years afterwards he was admitted to the Bar; in 1855 Mr. Horace Holden, in whose office he had studied, offered him a partnership with himself and T. H. Thayer; this firm continued in existence until 1858, Mr. Arnoux demonstrating his legal knowledge and ability and gaining a promising practice at the Bar; upon the dissolution of the firm he engaged in practice for himself, and continued for ten years without a partner; he then became a member of the firm of Wright, Merrihew & Arnoux, and in 1870 formed the legal partnership of Arnoux, Ritch & Woodford, a business connection which persisted for twelve years subsequently. In 1882 Governor Cornell appointed Mr. Arnoux judge of the Superior Court of the city and county of New York, to succeed Judge Speir, who had resigned his seat; several questions of grave importance were brought before him, among them the construction of the newly revised Sunday laws; Judge Arnoux's decisions were widely approved, and brief as was his term of service, he won the general respect of his profession and the public. Judge Arnoux has always been an earnest advocate of the cause of governmental reform, and an officer and worker in a number of benevolent and religious societies; he was one of the founders of the Union League Club and the New York Bar Association, and was president of the State Bar Association in 1889-90, during which he was very active in the celebration of the hundredth anniversary of the formation of the U. S. Supreme Court; he is a profound student of the Bible, and has collated numerous unpublished Biblical manuscripts. Residence, Vineyard Haven, Mass.

Residence, 44 Court St., Brooklyn, N. W.

ASTOR, John Jacob:

Capitalist; was born July 13th, 1864, at Ferncliff, Rhinebeck, N. Y.; son of William Astor, grandson of William B. Astor

and great-grandson of John Jacob Astor, the founder of the family in America. Mr. Astor received his education at St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H., and Harvard University; on leaving college he followed the example of his father in making an extended European tour, and on his return to the U. S. travelled extensively in Cuba and Mexico, and made several expeditions to the Rocky Mountain region along the line of the Northern Pacific R. R.; he is an ardent lover of sports and outdoor recreation and is an active member of many country clubs; great as those interests are, they are quite secondary to those connected with the management of his vast inherited estate, which commands his daily attention when in New York, where much time also is absorbed by his duties as director of many banks and trust companies; in 1897 he completed the Astoria Hotel, which immediately adjoined the Waldorf Hotel that had been built by his cousin, William Waldorf Astor, the joint hotels constituting the Waldorf-Astoria, one of the largest and costliest hotels in the world; the Hotel St. Regis, opened in 1904, is another great hotel built by Colonel Astor at large expense; he was appointed Colonel on the staff of Governor Morton in 1895; on the outbreak of the war with Spain, he gave a complete and fully equipped and manned battery of artillery to the national government; May 9, 1898, he was commissioned Inspector General with the rank of Lt. Col. U. S. V., with orders to report to Major General J. C. Breckenridge and to accompany him on an inspection of the camps of Chickamauga Park, Huntsville, Tampa, Key West, etc.; he was subsequently detached and ordered to report to Major General W. R. Shafter, at Tampa, Fla., for duty on his staff and to accompany the army of invasion in Cuba; he took part in the operations of the Fifth Army Corps, including the battle, siege and surrender of Santiago de Cuba, and after the surrender of the Spanish forces, was ordered by Major General Shafter, commanding the Army of Invasion, to deliver the official terms of capitulation to the Secretary of War; he received his discharge from the army in September, 1898, and was recommended by Major General Shafter, in his report to the Secretary of War, to be brevetted Colonel for "faithful and meritorious service;" Colonel Astor has a strong inventive and mechanical mind, as several patents issued to him for useful devices very aptly testify; he exhibited his pneumatic machine to remove worn-out material from roads before new stone is laid down, at the Chicago World's Fair, and was awarded a first prize. It acts by means of an air-blast which blows off the pulverized stone after it has been crushed; it is a device that is likely to prove of great utility in the macadamizing of country roads, and has been highly commended by the Scientific American; another invention decidedly more ambitious, but perhaps of some doubtful utility, is one to induce rain; its purpose is to move large volumes of surface air by a suitable mechanical device, and convey it to the upper atmosphere through a conduit. The idea underlying the device is that by moving a volume of warm moist air to the colder upper regions and preventing its mingling with the atmosphere while ascending it will discharge its moisture as rain; the practical application of this idea has not yet been fully realized. Colonel Astor, as yet, having contented himself with proposing the theory rather than with developing the mechanical means for its demonstration, he has also invented a practical turbine engine, and after obtaining American and foreign patents, presented the entire device to the public; in addition to his mechanical inventions, Colonel Astor has entered the field of authorship and has shown a marked literary ability in his book entitled, A Journey in Other Worlds, a Romance of the Future; the story is an ideal conception of the inhabitants of the planets Jupiter and Saturn, and is a curious and interesting piece of fiction, with a plot handled in a very original manner; in 1891 he married Miss Eva L. Willing, of Philadelphia, a descendant of a prominent Pennsylvania family whose ancestors came to America with William Penn, and who still hold much of the original family property; this marriage united two of the leading Knickerbocker and Quaker family stocks; there are two children, a son, William Vincent Astor, born 1892, and a daughter. Colonel Astor's chief pleasure is automobiling, in which he takes a great delight; he is very expert in driving his cars, as he has a thorough and practical knowledge of their mechanism and construction. Cruising on his large steam yacht Nourmahal is another form of outdoor enjoyment. Colonel Astor is a member of many clubs, including the Metropolitan, Union, Knickerbocker, The Brook, New York Yacht, Riding, Racquet and Tennis, Country, Tuxedo, Society of Colonial Wars, etc. His town house is No. 840 Fifth Ave., his country place, Ferneliff, Rhinebeck, N. Y., and his secretary's office is No. 23 West 26th St., N. Y. City.

BARRETT, George C.:

Justice Supreme Court of New York since 1871; born Dublin, Ireland, July 23, 1838; on the side of his father, the Rev. Gilbert Carter Barrett, of the Church of England, he is of English descent, while the Irish blood of his mother, Jane M. Brown, has given him his keen wit and genial humor; in early life he was brought to America by his father, who came as a missionary to the Canadian Indians; for six years he pursued his studies with his father, then he attended the school at Delaware, Ont.; at the age of thirteen he came to New York and studied in Columbia Grammar School and Columbia College, but he was obliged to leave the college before graduation in order to earn his own living; when but sixteen he began writing for the newspapers, and he was most successful in his journalistic work; he studied law in the office of Van Cott, Cady & Smales, and was admitted to Bar when only twenty-one; his judicial career began at the early age of twenty-five, when he was elected Justice of the Sixth Judicial District Court; before the end of his term of service he was elected to the bench of the Court of Common Pleas; this position he resigned at the end of two years, and went back to his law office; he was president of the Young Men's Municipal Reform Association which fought so strenuously against the corrupt Tweed Ring; he was also a prominent member of the famous Committee of Seventy and was one of its counsel in the great injunction suit against the Ring which resulted in the appointment of Andrew H. Green as Deputy Comptroller, and the final exposure of the iniquities of the Ring; in 1871, he was elected Justice of the Supreme Court by an overwhelming majority; at his subsequent elections to the Supreme Court bench, in 1885 and 1899, his nomination and election were practically unanimous, party prejudice being laid aside in the desire to honor this able and upright judge; he has presided over many famous civil and criminal cases; among them may be cited the trial of Richard Croker for murder; that of Henry W. Jaehne, and the other "Boodle Aldermen" who were convicted of having received bribes, and of Jacob Sharp, who bribed them; those of the Tammany election inspector who fraudulently miscounted in favor of Maynard for Judge of the Court of Appeals, and that of Ferdinand Ward, the so-called "Napoleon of Finance," the first case where a man was ever convicted for a false representation or statement made over a telephone; his opinion in the Sugar Trust was affirmed throughout, and the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in the cases under the Sherman Act take the same general view of the subject; his charge in the Landraff Bakery Conspiracy case has repeatedly been referred to since in this and foreign jurisdictions; he thought out and had passed the Special Jury Bill, the first measure of the kind in this country; he assisted in the formation of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, having been consulted by the leaders of the party in power, and he was appointed a member of the Appellate Division of the First Department when the court was formed; he drew and had passed the act giving the Appellate Division the power to regulate the reorganization of the Supreme Court under the amended constitution of 1895, and under the power thus granted, he assisted in preparing the rules for the reorganized court; he wrote the majority opinion affirming the constitutionality of the Rapid Transit Act; this was affirmed by the Court of Appeals and guaranteed to N. Y. City the underground railroad recently completed; when the Appellate Division Court House was formally opened, he responded to the speeches of the Bar; in 1900, preferring the more interesting work of the civil and criminal courts, at his own request he was relieved of the assignment to the Appellate Division and returned to his Supreme Court duties; in his younger days he achieved a high reputation as a man of letters, and one of his plays; An American Marriage, was produced at Wallack's Theatre in December, 1883; he is a master of English, and his early literary work has so permeated his legal labors that he is famed not only for the force and clearness of his opinions, but also for their grace of diction; he married Mrs. Gertrude F. Vingut, daughter of Sumner Lincoln Fairfield, the New England writer and poet; he is a member of the University, Century, Metropolitan, Manhattan and Democratic Clubs of N. Y. City. Address, 106 East 30th St., N. Y. City.

BECK, James M.:

Lawyer; born Philadelphia, July 9, 1861; educated in Philadelphia schools and at the Moravian College, Bethlehem, Pa., graduating in 1880; received the honorary degree of LL. D. from Muhlenberg College in 1892; after a years' service as clerk in the Philadelphia & Reading R. R. office, he began the study of law under Albert A. Outerbridge, and was admitted to practice before the Philadelphia Bar in 1884; his marked ability as an advocate was soon evident, and led in 1885 to a partnership with Hon. William F. Harrity, which continued till 1898, and in 1888 brought him the appointment by the United States Attorney General of Assistant United States Attorney for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania; his rapidly-increasing private practice forced him to resign this position in 1892, but in 1896 he received the appointment of United States Attorney for the same district, and held this position for four years, resigning July 11, 1900; he was immediately appointed Assistant Attorney General of the U. S., which office he held till April 30, 1903; in 1898 was the Democratic and Independent candidate for District Attorney; as U. S. Attorney, prosecuted many important criminal cases, convicting the Cuban filibusters, the Lancaster counterfeiters, and the derelict officials of the Chestnut Street Bank; in his prosecution of those who were breaking the neutrality laws punishing filibustering, he had to contend against the strong sentiment in favor of Cuban independence, and was opposed in the Court of Appeals by the eminent counsel, Senator Gray, of Delaware, but obtained a decision in favor of the Government; the case against the counterfeiters was also a notable one, and ended in the conviction, not only of the accused, but also of former United States District Attorney Ellery P. Ingham and his law partner, Harvey K. Newett, who were proved to be criminally concerned in the affair; as Master, appointed by the U. S. Court, he sold in April, 1902, the Philadelphia Record for $3,000,000, the highest price ever obtained for an American newspaper at public sale; in 1902 he entered the law firm of Sherman and Stirling, of New York, and removed to that city; he is also senior member of the firm of Beck, Robinson & Kane, of Philadelphia; in 1890 he married Lilla Mitchell, a daughter of James Mitchell, of Philadelphia; his phenomenal progress in his profession has been partly due to his marked powers as an orator, which have been displayed on many public and private occasions; in 1892 he delivered the Fourth of July oration in Independence Square, and in 1893 the oration on Pennsylvania Day at the Chicago Exposition; another striking speech was that given at the unveiling of the Statue of Stephen Girard, in Philadelphia; probably his most notable speech was that in response to the toast: The American Bar, at the dinner given in London by the Bench and Bar Association of England to the similar association of the U. S.; he is a member of the Contemporary Club, and the Browning Society of Philadelphia, and of the Lotos Club of N. Y. BELMONT, August:

Banker; born N. Y. City, Feb. 18, 1853; his preliminary education was obtained at the Rectory School, Hampton, Conn.; at Haverford College, Penn., and Phillips Exeter Academy, after which he entered Harvard University, where he was graduated in 1875; shortly afterwards he entered his father's banking house; the death of his father and the devotion of his brothers to legislative pursuits, in time threw the whole care of the great business mainly within his hands and he proved himself fully capable of handling it. In addition to its American interests, the house of August Belmont & Co., possesses vast foreign interests as the accredited representative of the Rothschilds in America, its European connections extending to every important field of finance in that continent. In addition to his immediate connection with the banking business, he has assumed other business interests, perhaps the most important of which is the presidency of the Interborough Rapid Transit Co.; is chairman of the board of directors of the Louisville and Nashville R. R., a director of Chicago, Milwaukee, and St. Paul R. R., vice-president of the Kings County Elevated R. R., and a director of the Bank of the State of N. Y., the National Park Bank, the Equitable Life Insurance Co., the Manhattan Trust Co. and other corporations. Politically he is strongly Democratic in his views. Member of the American Kennel Club, to which his earnest efforts as president have given a commanding position among organizations of this kind; in the development of thoroughbred horses he has been equally active, and the present prosperity of turf interests in this state, is largely due to his individual efforts; member Union, Knickerbocker, Manhattan, Country, New York Athletic (of which he has been president), and various other clubs; he is flag-officer of the Corinthian Yacht Club; Mr. Belmont married in 1881 Miss Bessie H. Morgan, now deceased. Residence, Hempstead, L. I.; office, 23 Nassau St., N. Y. City.

BELMONT, Oliver H. P.:

Legislator and financier; born N. Y. City, Nov. 12, 1858; graduated U. S. Naval Academy, Sept. 30, 1874, subsequently serving in navy and resigning, 1876. Formerly member of August Belmont & Co., bankers. In 1900, member of National Democratic Convention. In Congress, 1901-03. Member of Union, Knickerbocker, Manhattan, Metropolitan, Racquet, Lawyers, Meadow Brook, Lambs, New York Yacht, Turf and Field, University, New York and Metropolitan Club of Washington; married Mrs. Alva (Smith) Vanderbilt, N. Y. City. Residence, 677 5th Ave.; office, 1 Madison Ave., N. Y. City.

BELMONT, Perry:

Eldest son of August Belmont, the renowned financier, born N. Y. City, December 23, 1851; was graduated from Harvard 1872, taking special honors in history and political economy. He afterwards entered the University of Berlin for a course in civil law, and on his return to America took a course of law at Columbia Law School, where he was graduated 1876. In 1880, he argued in the important suit of the Pensacola Telegraph Co. against the Western Telegraph Co., being counsel for the last named corporation in opposition to Senator Charles W. Jones, of Florida. Mr. Belmont gained the case, and secured an opinion from Chief Justice Waite, to the effect that telegraphing comes under the commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States. In 1880 he entered the political field as a candidate for Congress, and was elected as representative for the First District of N. Y.; served in Congress during four consecutive terms, and during the last four years of his service was chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. In Congress he earnestly advocated tariff reform, holding similar views on the question with Carlisle, Morrison, Hurd, and other Democratic leaders; the bill to indemnify the Chinese for the massacre at Rock Springs was introduced and carried through the house by Mr. Belmont, and he strongly advocated on several occasions the strict observance of treaty obligations with the Chinese government; as chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee opposed and defeated the effort of the Nicaragua Canal Co. to secure support from the U. S. Government; the passage of the bill by which the U. S. became one of the first nations to participate in the Paris Exposition was due to his efforts, and gained him the thanks of the French government and the Cross of the Legion of Honor; the abolition of the tariff on works of art was persistently advocated by him; while he secured, by an almost unanimous vote, the passage of the Retaliation Bill on the fisheries dispute for non-interference with Canada; Mr. Belmont resigned his seat in the House to accept the nomination, by President Cleveland, as United States minister to Spain; since his return from this official service he has resided in N. Y. City, where he is a member of many important clubs and societies, including Metropolitan, Knickerbocker, University, New York Yacht, Arm and Navy, and Jockey. Address, 580 Fifth Ave., N. Y. City.

BENNETT, James Gordon:

Proprietor of New York Herald; the only son, and successor in his journalistic career, of James Gordon Bennett, the founder of the New York Herald, was born N. Y. City, May 10, 1841. His mother, Henrietta Agnes Crean, had in her early days been an accomplished music teacher of N. Y. City; she died in Italy; shortly after the death of her husband; on the death of the elder Bennett, in June, 1872, his son, who had been carefully educated, and had been thoroughly trained in the requisites of journalism, became his successor in proprietorship and management of the Herald, which has since that time remained under his care; as manager of this influential sheet he has been remarkably enterprising, hesitating at no expense which would be likely to bring the Herald to public notice and quite distancing competitors in the brilliancy and daring of his journalistic feats; several of the more striking of these may be named; the celebrated Jeannette Polar Exploring Expedition was fitted up and sent out at his expense, as a Herald enterprise; the unfortunate finale of this expedition—for which Mr. Bennett was not in the slightest sense responsible—brought it most vividly to public attention, and did much to arouse renewed interest in the problem of the polar seas; a still more notable expedition—a stroke of genius, as we may fairly call it, on the part of the Herald management—was the sending of Henry M. Stanley to Africa on his famous expedition in search of the great explorer Livingston; the success of Stanley in this quest was one of the most important events in the history of the latter half of this century, and the starting point in that succession of expeditions by Stanley which have gone so far towards opening the "Dark Continent," which had so long lain under a cloud of mystery; the inception of this great work we owe to the happy thought and brilliant enterprise of Mr. Bennett, and to his keen judgment of men in the choice of the born explorer Stanley; a third item of Herald enterprise, of which mention may fitly be made, was the publication in England of storm warnings telegraphed from the U. S., a movement which attracted the favorable attention of meteorologists in general and added to the fame and circulation of the enterprising journal. For many years Mr. Bennett has made Paris his principal place of residence, his time being chiefly given to superintending the collection of foreign news for the pages of the Herald. In 1833 he became associated with Mr. John W. Mackey in an important enterprise, that of organizing the Commercial Cable Co., with the purpose of laying a new cable between America and Europe to compete with the combined English and French lines; the completion of this enterprise had the effect of greatly decreasing the cost of ocean telegraphy. Mr. Bennett's life has been far from exclusively devoted to business; on the contrary, he has taken a great interest in sport, especially in yachting, of which for years he was an enthusiastic devotee; in this field he has been as enterprising and as novel in method as in journalism; in 1866 he took part in a memorable yacht race, which had the wide Atlantic for its course, its terminal points being Sandy Hook and the Needles, Isle of Wight; this transatlantic race was won by his schooner yacht, the Henrietta, against two competitors, in thirteen days, twenty-one hours, and fifty-five minutes; in 1870 he sailed in a similar race across the ocean, from Queenstown to New York; in this case his yacht, the Dauntless, was beaten by the English yacht Cambria, though only by the short lead of two hours; it will suffice to say in conclusion that the journal made successful by the father's enterprise and activity has been kept on the rising tide of success and fortune by the son, and that the new building of the Herald, with the interesting public display of its press work, is one of the notabilities of the metropolis; member of leading clubs of New York, London and Paris. Address, 120 Champs Elysees, Paris, France; New York Herald, N. Y. City.

City when he was a child, and his education was begun in the schools of that city; he attended the College of the City of New York, and was graduated from Columbia College with the degree of Ph. B., and then entered Columbia Law School, graduating in 1886, and receiving the degree of LL. B. (Cum Laude). After graduating, he traveled extensively, visiting not only the usual places in foreign countries, but made excursions into the then un-frequented districts of Russia, and the northeastern countries of Asia; he was admitted to the New York Bar in 1887 and in 1893, on the invitation of the late Austin Abbot, his personal friend, he became lecturer at the New York University Law School, and in 1894, he became professor of the Law of Corporations and lecturer of Special Statutory Procedure in that institution, which, in 1893, awarded him the degree of LL. M.; he resigned his professorship in 1900, as the demands for his practice, in which he is prominent in matters relating to corporation interests and corporate litigation, were so urgent. Mr. Bostwick is well known to the profession as author and contributor of various legal articles and addresses; in 1885, he joined the Seventh Regiment of N. Y. City, serving actively for nearly fifteen years, and has a record of nearly twelve years' attendance without missing a roll-call. In 1898 he married Laura Bostwick, a daughter of Colonel Charles B. BROWN, John George:

Artist; born Durham, England, Nov. 11, 1831; early in life began to draw, and a nine made a portrait of his mother; his boyhood was passed at Newcastle-on-Tyne, where his father was a practising lawyer, and there he was apprenticed to learn the glass-cutting trade; at the age of eighteen he entered the School of Design at Newcastle, studying under Robert Scott Lander; after attaining his majority he obtained employment in the Holyrood Glass Works, Edinburgh, and began to study art in the Royal Academy, where, in 1853, he won a prize for the best drawing from the antique; soon went to London, where he supported himself by drawing for painting on glass; later came to New York, making his home in Brooklyn. He found employment in the Flint Glass Works of William Owen, and went on with his art study at the same time, having the advantage of instruction in the Academy of Design, N. Y. City, under Thomas Cummings. His first success was in painting children; later on he made a specialty of newsboys and boot-blacks; of equal merit are the canvases on which he has depicted rustic and humble life, in which men and women are the chief and only figures; his works, most of which are in oil, are very numerous, and are widely known through reproductions; he was elected an associate of the National Academy of Design in 1862, an academician in 1863, and vice-president in 1899; was made president of the American Water Color Society in 1887, and is now president of the Artists Fund Society; he received honorable

CANNON, Henry White:

Chairman Board of Directors Chase National Bank and ex-comptroller of the currency; born Delhi, N. Y., Sept. 27, 1850; Benj. Cannon, his parental grandfather, in whose honor Cannonsville, N. Y., received its name, was a man who stood high in the business world, and the same may be said of his son, George B. Cannon; postmaster for many years at Delhi, under President Grant. Henry W. Cannon was educated in the private schools at Delhi, and studied at the Delaware Literary Institute; he inherited a strong business proclivity, and, having decided to pursue the business of banking, he obtained a position in the First National Bank of Delhi, where he was made teller before he became twenty years of age; he left immediately afterwards, being offered, in 1870, what seemed to him a better position in the Second National Bank of St. Paul, Minn.; in 1871 he removed to Stillwater, Minn., and, though only twenty years old, he organized there the Lumberman's National Bank, of which he became cashier and active manager, and continued so for thirteen years. Two years after this institution came into existence the panic of 1873 began, and banks everywhere suspended currency payment, but so skillful and judicious was the management of the youthful cashier that his bank was carried through the storm without once refusing payment; when the public debt was refunded he became active in purchasing and exchanging government bonds for Minnesota banks; he also negotiated loans for the city of St. Paul; his operations in these various directions, which frequently brought him to the East, and into contact with prominent officials and financiers, gave him such a reputation as an able banker that in 1884, at the solicitation of the Minnesota Congressmen and numerous bankers, he was appointed, by President Arthur, comptroller of the currency, to succeed Hon. John J. Knox; in this responsible position Mr. Cannon quickly demonstrated his ability; young as he was, his experience had been varied, and he had diligently studied the principles of banking and commercial law; he found himself at once in a position of difficulty, the financial crisis of 1884 causing great trouble in the banking community, during which many banks were saved from going into the hands of receivers by the skill and judgment of the new comptroller; he also wisely dissuaded the Senate from ordering an inquiry into the condition of the banks of New York, which might have precipitated disaster; during his term of office the charters of numerous national banks expired, and few charters were granted only after the comptroller had satisfied himself of the soundness of the institutions; this was a task demanding great labor and vigilance on the part of Mr. Cannon; it was very judiciously performed. On the election of President Cleveland, Mr. Cannon was asked to continue in office, but he resigned early in 1886 and removed to New York, where he became vice-president of the National Bank of the Republic. In November of the same year he became president of the Chase National Bank; resigned in February, 1904, and was elected chairman of its board of directors, which position he still holds. Mr. Cannon was appointed by Mayor Grant aqueduct commissioner; he was chosen by President Harrison as a member of the assay commissions of 1891 and 1892, and as one of the United States commissioners in the International Monetary Conference of 1892, in which he played a very important part; he has been a frequent contributor to newspapers on financial subjects; he is director of Great Northern, Lake Erie & Western; Oregon R. R. & Navigation Co.; director Guarantee Co., of North America; trustee Imperial Insurance Co. of London (Ltd); director Manhattan Trust Co.; chairman and president of the Pacific Coast Co., U. S. CARPENTER, Philip:

Lawyer, descended from a race of lawyers; his father, Alonzo P. Carpenter, a graduate of Williams College in 1849, practiced law in New Hampshire from 1852 to 1851, in the latter year he accepted a position on the bench of the Supreme Court, which post of honor he filled until his death in May 1878, having been chief Justice for the last three years of his service. Ira Goodall, his grandfather on his mother's side, was also a lawyer of high consideration, being the leading and most successful member of the profession in northern New Hampshire from the beginning of the century until about the period of the civil war. Another member of the family, Mr. Carpenter's uncle, Jonathan Ross, occupies an honorable a position in the leading and judicial circles of Vermont, having been a justice of the Supreme Court of that State for thirty years and for ten years chief justice of that court; born Bath, N. H., March 9, 1856; after receiving the usual district school education of New England children, he was entered, to prepare for college, at the well-known and well-endowed academy at St. Johnsbury, Vermont, in which his father had taken a similar preparatory course thirty years before; in 1873, he entered Dartmouth College, where, after a four years' course, he was graduated in 1877, having served as class historian in his senior year, and on his graduation being appointed to write the class prophecies for the commencement exercises; Mr. Carpenter subsequently entered upon the special study of the law, and was admitted to the New Hampshire Bar on Sept. 2, 1880, receiving on his examination for admission to practice the highest percentage of any then examined; selecting Lancaster, New Hampshire, as his field of practice, he continued there until June, 1885, gaining a good clientele and considerable reputation. In that month he removed to New York, having sought that city as offering a wider field, and better opportunities for progress and success; since that date he has continued in New York, steadily and successfully engaged in the practice of his profession; during his period of practice in New Hampshire served as judge-advocate-general on the staff of Governor Moody Currier, and in addition attained some political prominence as an active member of the Republican party, in whose principles he has an unyielding faith; in New York his practice quickly became large, and has gradually drifted towards "corporation law;" he was first Assistant District Attorney of New York County throughout 1897, when Hon. Wm. K. Olcott was District Attorney, the only Republican to hold that office in many years; Mr. Carpenter successfully tried many important criminal cases during that period, and kept up his private business at the same time, returning to it at the end of the year; he has had his offices in the Potter Building, 38 Park Row, since its opening in 1886; Mr. Carpenter is a member of various associations, including the N. Y. City and New York State Bar Association, and the Union League, the Republican, the Colonial, the Manhattan Athletic Clubs and the New England Society of New York; married Sept., 1880, Miss Fanny H. Rouse; Mr. Carpenter was appointed Assistant District Attorney of New York County in 1877, and served the full term. Residence, 265 West End Ave., N. Y. City.

CATLIN, Isaac S.:

Brigadier General, U. S. Army; born on the Catlin homestead near Owego, N. Y., July 8, 1835; educated in the common schools in the neighborhood, and at the Owego Academy; he early chose the legal profession and began its study in the office of Benjamin F. Tracy, and continued it in N. Y. City, where he was admitted to the Bar in 1857. When Gilbert C. Walker, afterward the Governor of Virginia, retired from the firm of Tracy, Warner & Walker, young Catlin was invited to take his place as junior partner of the firm, where he remained in active practice until he entered the Union Army in April, 1861. In the fall of 1860 he was elected to the position of mayor of Owego, being the youngest man up to that time who had held that office; upon the evening of the day in which President Lincoln issued his proclamation for 75,000 troops he raised a company of volunteers, of which he was unanimously elected captain; it is claimed that this was the first full company of volunteers enrolled in the North, which has never been seriously disputed; Catlin sprang from fighting stock; his grandfather, Nathaniel Catlin, enlisted at New Haven in the early days of the Revolution and served faithfully until the cause was gained; his maternal grandfather, Garrett Brodhead, then of Stroudsburg, Pa., served as an officer with Pennsylvania troops, and his great-uncle, General Daniel Brodhead, of Milford, Pa., served with distinction directly under Washington, who gave him command of the Department of the Delaware. Catlin's company joined the late General Frederick Townsend's Third Regiment of New York Volunteers; of his conduct in the battle of Big Bethel, General Townsend wrote, "There was no braver officer on that field than Captain Catlin;" in July, 1862, he was appointed lieutenant colonel 109th New York Volunteers, and became its colonel in June, 1864, and commanded it in most of the battles from the Wilderness to Petersburg; he was then appointed president of a general court-martial in Washington, where he served until June, 1865, when he was mustered out with his regiment. General Catlin received three brevet commissions for bravery in the field, and afterwards a medal of honor for most distinguished gallantry in action; in 1865 he was elected district attorney for Tioga County, N. Y.; in 1870 he was placed upon the retired list as colonel of infantry, having previously been commissioned as major-general by brevet; in 1871-72 assistant to the United States district attorney for the eastern district of New York; in 1877 he was elected district attorney for Kings County, N. Y., and re-elected in 1880; in 1885 he was nominated for mayor of Brooklyn, and was defeated by a defection in his own party in favor of the independent candidacy of General John B. Woodward. In 1893 he was nominated for Congress, but declined the nomination; in 1896 he was offered the nomination for lieutenant governor on the Democratic ticket; though General Catlin was prosecuting officer for ten years, he also defended many persons accused of crime, including those charged with murder in the first and second degrees; he was nine years counsel for the sheriff of King's County; six times chosen grand marshal of the Grand Army of the Republic, and selected by the mayor and common council to command the Columbian parade reviewed by President Cleveland. At the Centennial celebration on July 4, 1876, he was chosen by the mayor and common council to deliver the Centennial oration at Fort Greene, which was published by the city in pamphlet form; at the unveiling of the Soldiers' and Sailor's Monument in Owego, July 4, 1891, he delivered an address. Senator Thomas C. Platt presided at the meeting, and the then Secretary of the Navy, General Benjamin F. Tracy, delivered a great speech; General Catlin took a prominent part in public affairs during the Spanish-American War, and during the guerilla warfare in the Philippines; he visited Cuba in the winter and spring of 1899, and took the trip to the Philippines in December, 1900, and remained till April, 1901. His observations of the situation in Cuba and the Philippines were published in various journals of the country; General Catlin's son, G. deG. Catlin, is a first lieutenant in the Second United States Infantry, and served gallantly in Cuba and the Philippines; General Catlin has retired practically from business, and while his legal residence is in Brooklyn, he spends most of his time at the Catlin homestead, known as "Meadowfield," in Tioga County, N. Y., where he expects to make his permanent home in his advancing years. Address, 26 Court St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

CHANDLER, Albert Brown:

President of the Postal Telegraph Cable Co.; born West Randolph, Vt., Aug. 29, 1840; the American family of Chandlers had its origin in three brothers who settled at Roxbury, Mass., in 1637, and the subject of this sketch is also a descendant of John Winthrop, the first governor of Massachusetts, through his daughter, Mary Winthrop. Mr. Chandler was educated in the schools of his native town, and spent his school vacations in studying the printer's art and in working as a compositor in West Randolph and in Montpelier, Vt.; he also spent part of his leisure time in a telegraph office in his native town, performing duties here as a messenger and learning the art of operating. His knowledge of telegraphy thus gained stood him in good stead; his oldest brother, William W. Chandler, was then freight agent of the Cleveland & Pittsburg R. R., and procured him, in 1858, when eighteen years of age, the position of manager of the Western Union Telegraph office at Bellaire, Ohio. Early in the following year he was removed to Pittsburg and given a position in the office of the superintendent of the Cleveland & Pittsburg R. R., and three months afterwards was made agent of the railroad at Manchester, an important freight shipping point opposite Pittsburg he remained here until 1863, when he entered the military telegraph service of the Government as cipher operator in the War Department at Washington, to which position, in October, was added that of distributing clerk for General Eckert, superintendent of the Department of the Potomac; his duties took him frequently to the armies in the field, and brought him into contact with the President and the chief officials of the Government; in 1866, while the organization into one company of the several telegraph companies was in progress of completion, Mr. Chandler was made chief clerk in the superintendent's office for the eastern division, and also placed in charge of the transatlantic cable traffic, to which duties he subsequently added those of superintendent of the sixth district of the eastern division; January, 1875, was made assistant general manager of the Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Co.; from this post he rapidly advanced through the offices of secretary, trustee, treasurer, and vice-president to that of president, which position he attained in 1879, and held until the Atlantic and Pacific was absorbed by the Western Union in 1882; in October, 1881, accepted the presidency of the Fuller Electrical Co., one of the first to engage in the arc system of electric lighting. In December, 1884, at the instance of John W. Mackay, he was employed as counsel by the Postal Telegraph and Cable Co., and in 1885 was appointed by the N. Y. Supreme Court receiver of that company; when, through his efforts, the company was reorganized, he was elected its president and manager, and was also made general manager of the United Lines Telegraph Co.; he also became a director, member of the executive committee, and vice-president of the Commercial Cable Co. and of the Pacific Postal Telegraph Co., and a director, and afterwards president, of the Commercial Telegraph Co. In 1887, he, with several of the chief officials of the Western Union Telegraph Co., effected arrangements for the discontinuance of the destructive competition which had previously existed, much to the advantage of the telegraph companies and the public. He is now president New England Telegraph Co.; vice-president Commercial Cable Co., Postal Telegraph and Cable Co., Commercial Pacific Cable Co., Otis Elevator Co. and National Surety Co. Residence, 389 Clinton Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.; office, 253 Broadway, N. Y. City.

CHOATE, Joseph H.:

United States Ambassador to England since 1899; born Salem, Mass., Jan. 24, 1832; a descendant of one of the oldest and most respected of New England families, many of his relatives and ancestors having gained distinction in various fields of effort, particularly at the Bar. Mr. Choate entered Harvard when sixteen years of age, and was graduated in 1852; thence he passed to the Dane Law School, having decided to enter the profession so honorable in the family records, and was graduated in 1854; admitted to practice at the Massachusetts Bar in 1855. In 1856 Mr. Choate came to N. Y. City, to whose Bar he obtained admission; from that date to this he has been engaged in the practice of law in N. Y. City with a reputation equal to that of the finest advocates in the country. He has been engaged in many famous cases, in most of which he has borne a leading part, due to his forensic ability and thorough knowledge of the law; his distinction as one of the leaders of the Bar of New York is not his only legal claim to consideration; he is as popular as he is able, and may be considered as decidedly the leading lawyer of the city in this regard; his popularity is not confined to his clientele and to the people at large, but extends to the profession as well, it being doubtful if any other lawyer in the city has as many professional friends and well-wishers as Joseph H. Choate; this popularity is due, in a large measure, to his personal gifts of courtesy and geniality. Among the most celebrated cases in which he has been engaged may be named that of General Fitz-John Porter, whom he served as counsel in his protracted suit for reinstatement in his military rank, of the rights of which he had been deprived by sentence of a court-martial; the origin of this celebrated case must be familiar to all students of the Civil War; General Porter was charged by General Pope with disobedience of orders during the second battle of Bull Run, in failing to bring his troops into the engagement, although his corps was "within sight and sound of the battle," thus imperiling the army and being the principal cause of the defeat of the Union forces; the court-martial, convened at General Pope's instance, sustained these charges, and General Porter was cashiered and dismissed from the service in Jan., 1863; he continued under the ban of this decision for many years; in 1870 he appealed without effect to President Grant for a reversal of the decision of the court-martial; the struggle to obtain this reversal continued for years, and brought into play all Mr. Choate's legal powers; it was finally successful, its success being largely due to the ability of the plaintiff's counsel, and in 1886 General Porter was finally restored to the army with all disabilities removed. Another almost equally celebrated case in which Mr. Choate acted as premier counsel was the notable Cesnola case, in which also he was successful; these are but the most famous of the many important legal struggles in which he has been engaged; politically Mr. Choate is a member of the Republican party, and a very active one, taking a prominent part alike in national, State, and municipal politics, and exerting his powers particularly in the work of reform; Mr. Choate took the leading part in the formation of the recently formed Constitution of New York. In social circles Mr. Choate is highly esteemed; he is ready as an after dinner speaker, in which art he is noted for his pungent wit, and, if necessary, can be caustic and sarcastic; he is a member of the Union League, Harvard and other clubs, and the New England Society. Address, 1 Carlton Terrace, London, S. W., England.

CHOATE, William Gardner:

Lawyer; born Massachusetts, 1830; was graduated from Harvard, 1852, and Dane Law School, 1854; United States Judge of southern district of New York; resigned and continued law practice, N. Y. City. Residence, 40 Central Park, South; office, 40 Wall St., N. Y. City.

CLEVELAND, Stephen Grover:

Former President of the United States; born Caldwell, N. J., March 18, 1837; admitted to the Bar, Buffalo, N. Y., 1859. Elected in that city and in Erie County to minor offices, which he administered so thoroughly in the interests of the people that he was elected Mayor of Buffalo in 1881 and Governor of the State in 1882. In the administration of these offices he gained a national reputation for ability, honesty, integrity and statesmanship and was nominated by the Democratic party for the Presidency in 1884. After his election he incurred the displeasure of some of the party workers and, owing to this, and to the firm adherence to principles which he had enunciated during his term of office, he was not re-elected. Nominated again by his party he was re-elected in 1892. His two terms as President left him an enduring place in the respect of all good citizens without regard to party affiliations and his place in national history is exalted and secure. Since his retirement from public service he has devoted his leisure hours to literary and educational work chiefly with Princeton College, of whose faculty he is a member; writer of trenchant articles on public affairs. Married, in the White House, June 2, 1886, Frances Folsom. Address, Princeton, N. J.

When her brother was elected President of the U. S., she was Mistress of the White House until his marriage, June, 1886. Author: George Elliot's Poetry and Other Studies; The Long Run (novel); numerous magazine articles. Taught in New York several years, since which time she has traveled, making Vienna her headquarters.

CLEWS, Henry:

Banker. He is English by birth, coming from an old family of Staffordshire. His father, making a visit to this country, brought with him his son, not yet fifteen, and found young Henry so fascinated with the enterprise of the American people that he yielded to his desire to remain and engage in business life in N. Y. City, instead of returning to continue his studies for the ministry as originally designed to fit him, as an assistant to his cousin, the Vicar of Wolstanton; a position as clerk in the importing house of Wilson G. Hunt & Co., was obtained for him, where he remained several years, gradually advancing in position. In 1857 he became a member of the newly-organized banking firm of Stout, Clews & Mason; soon after its organization a change took place in the firm, its name becoming Livermore, Clews & Co.; it was well established and doing a good business at the outbreak of the Civil War, a contest which proved highly to its advantage. Mr. Clews had the highest confidence in the ability of the government to suppress the rebellion, was outspoken on the side of the North, and was in consequence selected by Secretary Chase as the agent for the sale of U. S. Treasury Notes and bonds issued by the government to meet the ordinary expenses of the war; neither the notes or bonds were at first very favorably received by the garded them as very risky securities, owing to their doubts as to final results of the war; but Mr. Clews though he knew the treasury was empty, had the utmost faith in the strength and ability of the government and the recuperative power of the North, and not only put all his firm's money in the notes and bonds, but borrowed largely, bringing himself seriously into debt; the task he had undertaken was one of magnitude and difficulty, and his exertions in its successful prosecution have become a matter of history; in 1864 his firm subscribed to the national loan at the rate of from five to ten millions a day. After the war he made banking his distinctive business. The present firm of Henry Clews & Co. was formed in 1877. Its business has since grown so large as to make it one of the great and renowned banking houses of the world. Mr. Clews has always taken a deep interest in American politics, but merely to the extent of securing good government, he persistently declining to accept an official position; twice the portfolio of the U. S. Treasury Department has been tendered him, and as often the Republican nomination for mayor of New York, but business interests have in each case forced him to decline these proffered honors; he also declined the post of collector of the port of New York, offered him by President Grant, and subsequently conferred upon General Arthur; yet he has not hesitated to act when reform became imperative, and to him is due the credit of originating and organizing the famous Committee of Seventy, before whose assault the Boss Tweed ring went down. His views on public or business affairs are broad and liberal, his opinions on the latter topic being particularly expressed in his book entitled Twenty-eight Years in Wall Street, a work of great literary merit, which has called out highly favorably comment; he served for many years as treasurer of the American Geographical Society and the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals; was one of the founders of the Union League Club; is one of the oldest members of the Union Club, and is connected with many other institutions of the city. Married Miss Lucy Madison Worth-

COLER, Bird S.:

Broker and former comptroller of the City of N. Y.; born Oct. 9, 1867, Champagne, Ill.; early education obtained in the public schools of Brooklyn, and subsequently completed at the Polytechnic Institute and the Andover Academy; on leaving the Andover Academy he entered his father's banking house and demonstrated his qualifications to become a member of that firm, in which he was taken, as a partner, soon after attaining his majority; he devoted a great deal of his time, apart from the ordinary routine of the banking business, to the special study of financial and municipal law, and was speedily recognized in Wall St. as an authority upon these vital and intricate subjects. This gave him a remarkable prestige as the representative of his banking house, and one of the youngest and most active members of the Stock Exchange, and in a few years he came to be regarded as one of the most farsighted and shrewdest of financiers in N. Y. City; in 1891 he identified himself with Brooklyn's political affairs, and in 1892 was nominated for alderman-at-large, and although defeated, he ran so far ahead of his ticket that he was looked upon as one of the most prominent rising young Democrats of Brooklyn. He organized the Young Men's Democratic Club of the Twenty-third Ward of Brooklyn, and when the office of comptroller, under the original Charter of Greater New York, was being considered, it was conceded that the strongest man in Brooklyn should be selected as the candidate the Democracy nominated him, and it was a most justifiable selection, as he was elected by the largest vote given for any candidate on the ticket, and he carried the Twenty-third Ward, which had always previously been the Republican banner ward, by the largest majority ever cast there, thus showing his great popularity among those who knew him best of both parties; his election was most fortunate for the people and the taxpayers of the five boroughs consolidated into the new city. When his term was ended and he gave up his office he was universally complimented as having been one of the best and most efficient comptrollers the City of New York ever had; he not only administered the affairs of the comptrollership with ability and honesty, but in several instances when the treasury was illegally attacked by what he regarded as piratical methods, and no funds were available to defend the city's interests, he advanced the money necessary to maintain the city's rights out of his private means; was nominated for governor on the Democratic ticket in 1902, but was defeated by a close margin. Residence, 224 Hancock St., Brooklyn, office, 34 Nassau St., N. Y. City.

Residence, 63 South Portland Ave.; office, 160 Atlantic Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

COON, Daniel Wells:

Manufacturer; vice-president of the International Shirt and Collar Co., Troy, N. Y.; born Gloversville, N. Y., June 10, 1843; his place of birth has long been famous for the manufacture of gloves, and at an early age he manifested an inclination to follow that occupation in life; at the age of eighteen, however, he was invited by his brother, John H. Coon, then in partnership with Mr. Van Volkenburg in the manufacture of collars at Troy, N. Y., to visit that city, and the result was that he became interested in the collar business, and devoted himself for a period of three years to a thorough study of its details. So arduous, indeed, were his efforts in that direction that his health became impaired, and he was compelled to seek rest and change in the West; this he found in Minneapolis, Minn., where, with the coming of renewed health, he established a woolen business; after an experience of five years in the West, he came again to the East, located in Philadelphia, and established the house of Coon, Reynolds & Co., destined to be a great factor in the collar business of the U. S.; he then visited N. Y. City and established a branch of the business there, under the firm name of Coon & Co., and formed a like organization in Chicago. Soon after he returned to Troy, N. Y., where, in 1888, was organized the firm of Cluett, Coon & Co., by the consolidation of the two concerns of George B. Cluett Bros. & Co. and Coon & Co., which union was a complete success, and the great prosperity which attended the venture was an ample justification of that important change in the conduct of affairs in the collar manufacturing industry; the connection was continued for ten years, the firm being known as the largest shirt, collar and cuff manufacturers in the world. He devoted special attention to the superintending of its New York office, making his home at Mount Vernon, N. Y.; about eight and a half years ago he retired from the firm; after a short period of inactivity he joined interests with the International Shirt and Collar Co., of which he is now vice-president; he is regarded everywhere as one of the strongest and most sagacious men identified with the great collar industry; he is a man of rare judgment in dealing with business problems, and has a genius for big things. It was he who proposed the successful collar combine, and the result revealed the soundness of his judgment; in addition to his connection with the International Shirt and Collar Co., he is a director in the Mount Vernon Trust Co., and in the Peerless Shoe Machinery Co.; he is a member of the Troy Club, the Aldine Association, New York, the Siwanoy Country Club, and the Republican Club of Mount Vernon, N. Y. Address, Mount Vernon, N. Y.

CUYLER, Theodore L., D. D.:

Clergyman; born Aurora, N. Y., Jan. 10, 1822. At sixteen entered Princeton College, and at seventeen joined the Presbyterian Church; later entered Princeton Theological Seminary, where he was graduated in 1846; resigned pastorate of Lafayette Avenue Church, Brooklyn, in 1890, after thirty years of service. The growth of Brooklyn had, at the beginning of Dr. Cuyler's pastorate, fairly begun, and he, seeing there a promising field for Christian ministration, consented to take charge of the church; the growth of the church proved marvelous, and from that time to the present its history, under Dr. Cuyler's vigorous pastorate, has been one of the highest prosperity; as a Christian orator, Dr. Cuyler holds a very high rank; his power as a preacher "lies in picturesque description, and the weaving in of scenes and illustrations from Scripture and from daily life; in manner he is ver yearnest, and in results highly effective, being possessed of the highest qualities of oratory and the most impressive power. In addition to his labors in the pulpit he has been a voluminous writer, both in the columns of the religious press and in published books, of which he has written many on religious subjects. He has also been a persistent laborer in great reforms such as the Children's Aid Society, the National Temperance Society, and others, and as a whole his life has been one "mighty for good." DAULTON, Agnes McClelland:

Author and illustrator; reared in the Tuscarawas Valley in a family keenly appreciative of humor and personal anecdote, which they drew from the earliest settlement of Ohio, while the quaint community of Zoar was on one hand and the historic Moravian village, Gnadenhutten, was on the other. After receiving education at Oberlin began writing and drawing to amuse herself during a prolonged illness. The first story and the first sketch sold, and she was soon contributing regularly to a number of periodicals. While living in Cleveland she became a prominent member of the Ohio Woman's Press Club and was married to George Daulton, also a writer, of Chicago. She has written and illustrated many stories and poems for children, and three books on nature: Wings and Stings; The Autobiography of a Butterfly, and Dusk-Fliers, besides the Philamclique Stories for the Outlook, drawn from the delightful material with which she was familiar in her childhood. Address, 408 Richmond Terrace, New Brighton, S. I., N. Y.

DAULTON, George:

Writer; of English descent and Southern parentage; born Missouri in the hardships of war and the settlement of a new country, he inherited a taste for writing from both his parents; his mother implanting in him a reverence for the English classics so early that the music of the uncomprehended phrases held his fancy until he was inspired into an understanding of them. Being physically frail, his education was almost wholly at home, after an unsettled boyhood, in the retirement of his own library. His first published productions were on Shakespearean and dramatic subjects. Subsequent poems and stories for periodicals led him into magazine writing as an occupation. He married Agnes Warner McClelland, a writer, of Cleveland, Ohio, and as their work developed it became necessary for them to remove from Chicago to the wider literary field of New York. The range of his work is from practical business stories of banking and mining for men to the thoughtful and leisurely narrative, or again to the fanciful. Address, 408 Richmond Terrace, New Brighton, Staten Island, N. Y.

DAVENPORT, Charles Benedict:

Teacher, investigator and author; born Stamford, Conn., June 1, 1866; son of Amzi Benedict and Jane Joralemon (Dimon) Davenport, of Brooklyn, N. DAYTON, Charles W.:

Lawyer; born Brooklyn, Oct. 3, 1846; comes from New England ancestry; his grandfather became a leading merchant in N. Y. City, and his father, Abraham C. Dayton, whose tastes were literary, contributed much to the periodicals of his day, and was the author of, Last Days of Knickerbocker Life in New York; is descended from Andrew Adams, colonel in the Revolutionary War, speaker of the Continental Congress in 1779 and 1780, and chief justice of Connecticut; Mr. Dayton was educated in New York, and in 1861 entered the College of the City of N. Y.; on account, however, of financial reverses to his father at the outbreak of the Civil War, he left college and entered a law office, studying also in the Columbia College Law School, where he was graduated in 1868; was admitted to the Bar, and since then he has been actively engaged in legal labors; aside from his professional duties has been very active in metropolitan affairs; trustee of the Church of the Puritans; director of the Twelfth Ward Bank and Empire City Savings Bank, both of which he is counsel; trustee of the Harlem Library and the Harlem Law Library, and president of the "Board for the Improvement of Park Avenue above One Hundred and Sixth Street," a work which has involved the expenditure of several million dollars, much to the public benefit; this work was authorized by the Legislature in 1892. In addition to these corporations he is a member of various clubs and societies, including Harlem Democratic, Sagamore, Manhattan, Down Town and Players Clubs, Geographical Society, and the Sons of the Revolution; was one of the incorporators of the Post-Graduate Medical School; belongs, in addition, to the Bar Association of the State of N. Y. and the City of N. Y. He early took an active interest in politics, as a member of the Democratic party; in 1864 he made speeches advocating General McClellan as a candidate for the Presidency, and in 1881 was elected to the State Legislature, where he became prominent in the deliberations of that body; municipal reform was earnestly advocated by him, and the primary election law of 1881 owed its passage largely to his efforts. He declined a re-nomination, owing to the pressure of professional duties; in 1882 he organized the Harlem Democratic Club, which has since then been highly influential; in the same year he acted as secretary of the Citizen's Reform Movement. On a number of occasions he has served as a delegate to Democratic state conventions; when Grover Cleveland was nominated for President in 1884; he worked energetically in the campaign for his election, and was one of the electors; in the campaign of 1888 he was equally active, making numerous speeches in favor of Cleveland, not only in New York but in other states; one delivered by him in Burlington, Iowa, was circulated as a campaign document by the Democratic National Committee; he again became active for his favorite candidate in 1892, and used all his powers to aid Cleveland's second election. In 1889 he served on the Centennial Committee of the Washington Inauguration, and in 1893 was elected a member of the New York State Constitutional Convention; June 5, 1893, he was nominated by the President as postmaster of New York; this nomination was unanimously confirmed by the Senate; delegate to National Democratic Convention, 1904. DEMOREST, William C.:

President of the Realty Trust; born N. Y. City, Aug. 2, 1859; son of late William Jennings Demorest, one of the most noted men of N. Y. City. His education was completed at Columbia College, graduating therefrom, B. A., 1881; 1883 the degree of LL. B. was conferred upon him; studied law in the office of Norwood & Coggeshall, being especially connected with their title and mortgage departments, and for several years he devoted himself to the practice of the law, but the management of his father's estate made such demands upon his time and attention that he finally abandoned his law practice, and, having a thorough knowledge of conveyancing, devoted himself entirely to the care of business affairs, and made real estate his specialty. He accordingly mastered that business in every detail and acquired a reputation for ability in that line, and in 1896, on the organization of Realty Trust, became its president, and has ever since held that position. Is an expert in the management of real estate, suburban as well as city, and upon all questions bearing upon the value of properties and upon financial operations connected with mortgages is a recognized authority. In his official capacity as an officer of Realty Trust and its allied companies, he has an extensive influence in the real estate field. In addition to being president of the Realty Trust, Mr. Demorest is a director and member of the executive committee of the Irving National Bank; director in the Bankers' Life Ins. Co.; president of the Cleveland, and director of the Royal and Price Baking Powder Companies and the Tartar Chemical Co., director of the American Colometer Co., treasurer and director of the State Realty & Mortgage Co. and of Demorest & Little (incorporated), and also trustee of the Irving Savings institution; member of the Chamber of Commerce, of the Bar Association, Lawyers, University Glee, Nineteenth Century, National Arts, Municipal Art, Knollwood, Niantic and St. Bernard Clubs, of the St. Nicholas Society, the Psi Upsilon Fraternity, and the Pilgrims; also a trustee of the Womans' Hospital and the Hospital Guild; Holland Society, Sons of the American Revolution, Society of Colonial Wars, and of St. Thomas Church; married, in 1884, Miss Alice Louis Gilbert, and has three children. Mr. Demorest's chief characteristics are his activity and strict attention to business details. He has a thorough grasp of his business affairs, and determination and individuality are strong traits in his composition; the eminence he has achieved in his chosen profession entitles him to be classed among successful Americans and as a thoroughly competent authority on real estate. Address, 68 E. 66th St., N. Y. City, and Hukweem Lodge, Loon Lake, Adirondacks, N. Y.

DENISON, Mrs. Dimies T. S.:

Ex-president of Sorosis Club and honorary president of the Federation of Women's Clubs; as the pioneer club of N. Y. City, the founder of the General Federation of Women's Clubs and of the New York State Federation, Sorosis must always occupy a position unique among clubs. It is purely a literary and social club, and in that quaint language of its certificate of incorporation, which is dated Dec. 30, 1868, several months after its organization, "the particular objects for which the said society shall be and is formed and incorporated, shall be and are hereby declared to be the promotion of agreeable and useful revelations among women of literary, artistic and scientific tastes; the discussion and dissemination of principles and facts which promise to exert a salutary influence on women and on society; and the establishment of an order which shall render the female sex helpful to each other and actively benevolent in the world". In the last clause is seen the germinal idea of the great federation, which the latter years developed. Sorosis has so long since passed the formative stage that the club is sometimes criticised because it retains its conservatism, but it has been a training school and has almost become a club of presidents—a "Loyal Legion"; it can afford to retain its customs and venerate its traditions, for its officers and members are leaders in the most practical activities of the hour, and these are the bonds that connect it with all clubs and promote the agreeable and useful relations among women for which the club was founded. Address, care Sorosis Club, N. Y. City.

Address, Elmira, N. Y.

DEPEW, Chauncey M.:

Senator; born Peekskill, N. Y., April 3, 1834; on his father's side he comes from Huguenot stock, his ancestors having left France on the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, and founded New Rochelle, in Westchester County, N. Y.; on his mother's side is descended from Roger Sherman; was graduated from Yale, 1856; studied law in Peekskill and was admitted to the Bar in 1858. He had already manifested a decided tendency towards politics, and developed that oratorical ability to which he owes his widespread reputation; while still studying law, he was recognized as a valuable aid to his party, and was sent as a delegate to the Republican State Convention of New York in 1858; in 1859 began legal practice, but in the same year took the stump in the political campaign, in which he showed marked power as an orator. In 1860 Mr. Depew became a candidate for the State Legislature, and was elected, though his district was Democratic; he was re-elected in 1862, and during this term served as chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means; in 1863 he received the Republican nomination for Secretary of State of New York; in the campaign he showed an industry and capacity that have rarely been equaled; for six weeks he made speeches twice a day, and with such effect that he was not only elected, but received a majority of thirty thousand. In 1866 Mr. Depew withdrew from political life to devote himself to his profession, and was appointed attorney for the New York & Harlem Railroad. In this position he showed such industry and skill that in 1869 he was made attorney for the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad. Ten years later the entire Vanderbilt system of railroads was placed under his legal care, and he was made a director in the board of each road; this important field of duty gave him an abundance of labor, much of it requiring the highest legal skill. In 1874 he was made regent of the University of the State of N. Y., and was appointed on the commission to superintend the erection of the State Capitol; in 1881, at the time of the resignations of Senators Conkling and Platt from the U. S. Senate, Mr. Depew became one of the candidates for the vacant seats; the struggle was a protracted one, his force growing till on the twenty-fourth ballot he lacked but ten votes of election; the murder of President Garfield ended the struggle. It became imperative that New York should be represented in the Senate, and Mr. Depew withdrew his name in favor of his leading opponent. In 1885 he was elected to the presidency of the N. Y. Central; this important post he filled until 1898; he was president of the West Shore railroad Co. Mr. Depew was elected U. S. Senator, 1899; delegate-at-large to five National Republican Conventions; candidate for President of the United States in convention of 1888, receiving ninety-nine votes, but withdrew in favor of Benjamin Harrison, who was nominated and elected. Among other positions which have been occupied by him are those of president of the Union League and of the Yale Alumni Association, director in the Union Trust Co., the Western Union Telegraph Co., the Equitable Life Assurance Co., and St. Luke's Hospital, and member of the N. Y. Chamber of Commerce. As a lawyer, Mr. Depew has been a remarkably hard worker; he is best known, however, for his telling oratory, which has been heard effectively in national Republican conventions (as in his striking presentation of ex-President Harrison's claims at the convention), at the Chicago World's Exposition, and on many other important occasions; married, in 1901, Mary Palmer. Address, 27 W. 54th St., N. Y. City.

Lakewood, N. J.; office, 156 Broadway, N. Y. City.

DE PEYSTER, John Watts:

Soldier and historian; born N. Y. City March 9, 1821; in both his lines of descent can be traced a succession of soldiers, during the Colonial and Revolutionary periods, an ancestry which naturally predisposed him towards a military career. Military reading was his youthful delight, and mock battles, in association with his cousin, Philip Kearney, afterwards major-general, U. S. Vol., a veteran of four wars and of three continents; became a writer and critic on military matters of very unusual powers; from his youth he controlled his own studies in this direction, and became in a true sense self-educated in military lore; became connected with the N. Y. Fire Department, in which he was so active as to bring on an affection of the heart, from which he suffered severely ever afterwards; was among the first to advocate a paid fire department and also to recommend the organization of a police force conducted on principles of military discipline; he entered the State military service in 1845, and was commissioned colonel; was appointed brigadier-general in the State service, being the first officer of this rank to be appointed by the governor; was sent to Europe as special military agent of the State, fully endorsed by the Federal Government with recommendations to U. S. ministers abroad and authority to call upon them for assistance in the performance of his duties to report on the organization of the militia and of municipal military organizations in foreign lands; his report became of great service in the organization of State troops and in the Civil War; appointed by Governor Clark in 1855 adjutant-general upon his staff. He resigned in a few months, having found the department so controlled by political influences as to render military reform next to hopeless; he combated this condition of affairs vigorously, and only resigned on finding his efforts unavailable; when war was threatened, he offered President Lincoln three regiments, and made a similar offer in the autumn of 1861; General de Peyster did not share in the general feeling, at that time, that the war would soon be over; he predicted in advance the extent and greatness of the struggle, and was the first to advocate the employment of colored men as soldiers. In 1869, on the occasion of the State of New York appointing him brevet major-general, flattering testimonials of his great military knowledge and the value of his advice and influence during the war were given by Generals Kearney, A. A. Humphreys, Pleasanton, Grant, Hooker, Rosecrans and others; General de Peyster has been a voluminous writer on the subject of his special study and on historical subjects in general. In addition to his service in this direction he has followed the philanthropic example of his father, and given much attention to matters of charity; he has built a home for consumptives and a hospital and home for invalid children, and furnished a home for girls in Dutchess County, N. Y., and in connection with it has erected a training school and donated nearly 300 acres of ground, part of the old family estate; he also has built and equipped a Methodist church at Madalin, Dutchess County; he has received the thanks of the New Jersey and Pennsylvania Legislatures for portraits of military celebrities presented to them, and has given the State of New York a bronze bas-relief representing the Continental camp at West Point during the Rebellion. General de Peyster, while retaining his city residence, on ancestral domain, dwells principally in his beautiful country seat at Tivoli, on the banks of the Hudson. Address, Rose Hill, Tivoli P. O., N. Y.

DITTENHOEFER, Abram Jesse:

Lawyer; born Charleston, S. C.; educated in public schools and Columbia College; at twenty-one admitted to the Bar; at twenty-two he was selected by the Republican party as its candidate for justice of the City Court, and some years thereafter was appointed a judge by Governor Fenton; upon the expiration of his term he declined a renomination; while on the bench he gave his entire salary to the widow of his predecessor, who had been left in destitute circumstances; delegate to the Republican convention that nominated President Hayes; though a Southerner by birth, Judge Dittenhoefer identified himself with the Republican party and served as chairman of the German Republican Central Committee for twelve successive councils of the party. As a lawyer the judge has gained a high reputation; his services have been required in every branch of the legal profession; has been conspicuous in litigations relating to the law of the stage, and is recognized as an authority in that branch of the law; for nearly fifty years a controversy raged between the U. S. and England as to the right to try a person for a different crime than the one for which he was extradited. England insisted that this could not be done, while the U. S. contended that the right existed. In the case against one Rauscher, Judge Dittenhoefer, appearing for the defendant, who was extradited for murder on the high seas, but subsequently tried and convicted for cruel and inhuman punishment of a seaman, moved for a dismissal of the latter charge on the ground that Rauscher was not extradited therefor. The lower courts decided against him, but the Supreme Court of the U. S., on appeal taken by him, reversed the crime for which he was extradited. This decision has become of international importance and since then the principle has been embodied in the extradition treaties with the U. S. He was originally assigned by the court to look after the interests of Rauscher, who was a poor mate of an American vessel, and became so interested in the important questions that he consented to carry on the proceedings to their final determination, without receiving any compensation. He was counsel in the criminal prosecution of the parties indicted in the importation of Japanese silks, and gained conspicuous success in defeating the application made by the heirs of Richard Wagner to enjoin the Metropolitan Opera House from producing Parsifal. He is also the counsel for Frank A. Barnaby and the other directors of the Knickerbocker Steamboat Co. in the indictments growing out of the "General Slocum" disaster in the summer of 1904. Address, 96 Broadway, N. Y. City.

DODGE, Grenville M.:

Civil Engineer and major-general, U. S. Volunteers; born Danvers, Mass., April 12, 1831; received training as a boy at Norwich University. When the War of the Rebellion commenced, he having previously organized a militia company at Council Bluffs, hastened to tender himself to the State government, but not having any arms, Governor Kirkwood sent him to Washington, and by his energy and zeal obtained what the members of Congress could not get for the State—arms and ammunition. It was Dodge's regiment that first entered the city at the battle of Springfield, and at Pea Ridge his brigade saved Curtis's army from disaster, although he was there wounded and had three horses killed and a fourth wounded under him; Colonel Dodge was then promoted brigadier-general, and, after recovering from his wounds, was assigned to duty at Columbus, Ky., with the task set before him of rebuilding the Mobile & Ohio R. R. He built all railroads needed in his department, and those that could be of use to the enemy he destroyed; he intercepted and defeated all raiding parties and almost effectively put a stop to guerilla warfare. About this time President Lincoln called him to Washington to consult about the construction of the Union Pacific R. R. When Vicksburg fell, Grant recommended Dodge for important promotion in recognition of his services;

then Grant succeeded Rosecrans, and he sent for Dodge for one of his fighting generals, but before he reached him he ordered him to halt and rebuild the railroad from Decatur to Nashville; this he did in forty days. Since the war his career has been one of great business and political importance; he was elected to Congress over a rival possessed of many and varied accomplishments, and on going to Washington was recognized as an authority on all great national questions; his important duties in connection with the completion of the Union Pacific R. R.—a directorship and the executive position he held in that great corporation—led him to decline election to Congress; appointed, 1898, president of the President's commission to inquire into the management of war with Spain; chairman of board of directors of Colorado & Southern Ry.; director of Fort Worth & Denver City R. R., also of Bowling Green Trust Co. Address, 1 Bowling Green, N. Y. City.

FOWLER, Edward Payson, M. D.:

Physician and author; born Coshocton, N. Y., Nov. 30, 1834; entered N. Y. Medical College in 1851; was graduated in 1855 as first prize man; his practice became unusually large almost from its commencement. In addition to the Old School system of medicine, he studied Homoeopathy, and practiced it in connection with the former, looking upon the two systems as component parts of a unit; he was always distinctly in opposition to sectarianism in medicine, declaring that medicine was a unit, and should be dealt with as such; his views in this direction were shared by the thinking part of the Old School, which in 1878 adopted those rules for N. Y. State, known as the New Code; under this the only qualification demanded for a physician is the legally required medical education, and the Old School became practically the Comprehensive School. He served in the Ward's Island and Hahnemann Hospitals, and in 1877 received the honorary degree of M. D. from the Board of Regents of the State of N. Y., and the appointment of Examiner in Anatomy in "the first board of N. Y. State Examiners for conferring medical degrees"; he was one of the founders of the New York Medico-Chirurgical Society, and served as its president; is member of the N. Y. Academy of Medicine, the N. Y. Neurological Society, the Medical Society of the County of N. Y., and other societies; his attention has been devoted assiduously to his profession, but he is unusually well versed in business affairs; politically he is an ardent Republican, and is a member of the Union League Club; married, 1873, Miss M. Louise Mumford, now deceased; in 1896 to Miss Mildred Russell; is author of valuable medical works, including: Ætiology and General History of Scarlet Fever; Pseudo-Typhoid Fever; Certain Maladies of the Heart; Abnormalities of the Cerebral Convolutions, etc.; he has also translated from the French and German such works as Charcot's Localization in Diseases of the Brain; Richert's Physiology and Histology of the Cerebral Convolutions, and Benedikt's Anatomical Study of the Brains of Criminals; he has in addition delivered many lectures before medical bodies. GEORGE, William B.:

Founder of the Junior Republic; born West Dryden, N. Y., June 4, 1866; while engaged in business in N. Y. City he became very much interested in work for boys and girls, and in 1890 took a group of children to Freeville for the summer, and for five years thereafter different groups were taken each summer for an outing. In studying children and the work being done for them he came to the conclusion that giving the children everything they needed free, tended to increase pauperism among them. While thinking over a remedy for this he conceived the idea of starting a junior republic modeled after the U. S. Government, and in 1895 put his ideas into operation. The plan worked so well and so much general interest was aroused that the work was at once incorporated and placed on a permanent basis. The summer feature was abandoned and a permanent institution which is exciting wide interest was established. Address, Freeville, N. Y.

GRANT, Frederick Dent:

Brigadier-General, U. S. Army; eldest son of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant; born St. Louis, Mo., May 30, 1850; received his education there and at Galena, Ill., where his father was engaged in business at the outbreak of the war. When Gen. Grant first set out from Galena for Quincy, to take command of the regiment to which he had been appointed, he had his son, then eleven years of age, with him; but on finding orders for an advance, he sent the boy back home; but two years afterwards he accompanied his father in the Vicksburg campaign, being present at five battles before he was thirteen years of age. He continued with his father and was in every battle of the campaign, till the surrender of Vicksburg to the Union Army; was present on March 9, 1864, at Grant's first interview with President Lincoln, when the famous soldier was made commander-in-chief of the U. S. Armies, with the grade of lieutenant-general. In 1867, then seventeen years of age, he entered the U. S. Military Academy at West Point, as the necessary step to his assuming a military career; was graduated in 1871, and assigned to the Fourth Cavalry, with the grade of second lieutenant; five years later he was raised to the rank of first lieutenant. In the summer of 1871 was employed on the Union Pacific and Colorado Central Railroads as an engineer, and in the latter part of that year he visited Europe, in company with General Sherman, gaining there much information in regard to the military art. In 1872, after his return to this country, he was placed in command of a cavalry escort to the party making a preliminary survey for the Southern Pacific R. R., as a protection against hostile Indians; in 1873 he was made an aide-de-camp on the staff of General Sheridan, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel; during the succeeding eight years he was engaged in military duty, taking part in nearly every expedition against the Indians. Within this period, during his father's celebrated journey around the world, he joined him in the Orient part of this excursion, and continued with him thereafter. He resigned his commission in 1881, and was constantly with his father during his illness, rendering him essential aid in the preparation of his "Memoirs," in verifying statements from the records. After General Grant's death he entered upon the care of his mother and the estate until 1889, when he was appointed by President Harrison U. S. Minister to Austria, and served in the country in that capacity until the incoming of the next administration. Served during the Spanish-American War as colonel Fourteenth N. Y. Volunteers; as brigadier-general of U. S. Volunteers at Porto Rico and commanding military district at San Juan; transferred to Philadelphia in 1899; July to Nov., 1899, in command of Second Brigade, First Division (Lawton's), covering the line south of Manila, fighting numerous skirmishes and two battles, namely, Imus, or Big Bend, Oct. 3d, and Benican, Oct. 6th; Nov. 1st, transferred to command of Second Brigade, Second Division (Mac Arthur); in the advance north this brigade fought every engagement in which MacArthur's division was engaged in during this advance. On Dec. 18, 1899, commanded the column invading the provinces of Bataan and Zambales. February, 1899, assigned to command of Fifth Military District Department of Northern Luzon, where many engagements with the insurgents took place, including the capture of the insurgents' strongholds at Lamanoa, where 137 rifles were captured; at O'Donnell 222 rifles were captured; Balubad resulting in the destruction of many quarters and large supplies; Buloc and Ipo, destroying a million pounds of rice which the insurgents had accumulated, secured altogether in this district during the guerrilla war 4,800 rifles, thousands of rounds of rifle and cannon ammunition and over eleven tons of powder. The Fifth District was the first to become settled and come under the civil government; transferred, Oct., 1901, to Southern Luzon, where several expeditions were made; when it became settled and under civil government was transferred to the command Sixth Separate Brigade in Samar and Leyte, and brought about the surrender of all the insurgents of Samar, April 27, 1902. Everything being settled in the Philippines, was transferred to the command of the Department of Texas Nov. 1, 1902; on Jan. 15, 1904, to the command of the Department of the Lakes; on Sept. 28, 1904, to command of the Department of the East. HAMMOND, Clarence W.:

Cashier and vice-president of the People's Bank, of Buffalo, N. Y.; born East Jeffrey, N. H., June 3, 1848; youth and early manhood was passed in Michigan, where he received a sound, practical education in the public schools of Saginaw and in the well known Academy of Ypsilanti, after which excellent preparation he immediately began the active business career in which he has since continued. His Michigan business experiences comprised those of a banker's clerk, manager in a mercantile establishment, and as a manufacturer of lumber and salt, with occasional newspaper work. In 1879, recognizing the growing importance and great possibilities of Buffalo as a business centre, he established there, in association with Wellington R. Burt, a very extensive and lucrative lumber and planing-mill business; he then became an active member of the Buffalo Lumber Exchange. He retired from the lumber business in 1889, and inaugurated the People's Bank of Buffalo, of which enterprise he is cashier and second vice-president; he was formerly treasurer of the Buffalo Board of Trade and Merchants' Exchange, and also of the Buffalo Press Club; member of several leading social clubs and Masonic bodies, and of the New York Transportation Club; as a stockholder, he is interested in numerous important industrial enterprises; married Adele E. Sirret, June 2, 1881, in Buffalo. Address, 199 Bryant St., Buffalo, N. Y.

HAMMOND, John Hays:

Mining engineer; born San Francisco, Cal., March 31, 1855; educated at the Hopkins Grammar School, New Haven, Conn.; entered Yale University and took the degree of bachelor of philosophy in the Sheffield Scientific School in 1876; subsequently the honorary degree of M. A. was conferred on him by Yale University. After leaving Yale, studied for three years in the Royal School of Mines, Freiberg, Saxony; on his return to America, in 1880, was appointed special expert on the U. S. Geological Survey and Mineral Census, to examine the gold fields of California; 1892, went to Mexico and superintended large silver mines at Senora, afterwards returning to California, where he was consulting engineer of mines in Grass Valley; was also made consulting engineer to the Union Iron Works, of San Francisco, and the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific R. R. In 1893 he went to South Africa as consulting engineer to the mines owned by Barnato Brothers, of London; in 1894 made an expedition in company with Cecil Rhodes and Dr. Jameson into the country now known as Rhodesia, and wrote on the mineral resources of that country for the British South Africa (chartered) Company; the result of this visit was very encouraging, and had largely to do with increasing the mineral development of that country; during that trip he examined and reported upon what he thought were the mines of King Solomon, and recent archaeological investigations lead to the belief that he was correct in his opinion as to the site of the mines of King Solomon; he was one of the four leaders in the reform movement in the Transvaal in 1895-96; this movement culminated disastrously in the Jameson Raid, with which Mr. Hammond was at no time in sympathy; result of this raid was the arrest of all of the "reformers," and the sentence of death of Mr. Hammond and the three other leaders; sentence was afterwards commuted to fifteen years imprisonment, but upon paying $125,000 he was subsequently released. He then went to London, and became connected with numerous large mining enterprises; soon after he returned to America representing several big English syndicates, and traveled extensively through the West and Mexico in connection with his business; he is a professor of mining at Sheffield Scientific School of Yale University, where he delivers several lectures each year, and also finds time to lecture at Columbia, Harvard, Johns Hopkins, and other large universities; also before some of the large scientific societies of this country. In 1891 he was elected a Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science; in March, 1893, he became connected with the Guggenheim Exploration Co. as general manager and consulting engineer, taking entire supervision of the vast interests of that company, although he still retained his connection with several of the largest mining companies in this country. In 1881 was married to Natalie, daughter of Judge J. W. M. Harris, of Mississippi, and has four sons—Harris, John Hays, Jr., Richard Pindle and Nathaniel; has offices in London, at 43 Threadneedle Street; is a member of the University Clubs of New York, Denver, Salt Lake and San Francisco; the Century Club of New York, the Denver Club at Denver, the El Paso Club at Salt Lake, and several societies; is also a Mason. Y. family, identified with public affairs from Colonial times; his great-great-grandfather, Alexander McDougall (after whom McDougall St. was named), commanded the vessels of war Barrington and Tiger in the conflict of 1756 with the French; was Colonel of the First N. Y. Regiment in 1775, raised to the rank of Major-General in 1777, put in command of the Highlands and West Point upon the discovery of Arnold's treachery; member of Congress 1780-81 and after termination of the war was State Senator and first President of the Bank of N. Y. and of the N. Y. Society of Cincinnati; his great-grandfather was the Judge Advocate-General of the Revolution, John Lawrance, who officiated at the trial of Major Andre, was subsequently U. S. Senator and U. S. Judge for the District of N. Y.; his grandfather, George Wright Hawkes, came to N. Y. from Dudley, England, about 1798, and married in 1807, Ann, daughter of Judge Advocate-General Lawrance, whose wife was the only daughter of General McDougall; his father, W. Wright Hawkes, LL. D., was a brilliant public speaker, well known at the Bar and in public life, during the period of Governor Marcy's administration, and held for some time the Chair of English Literature at Trinity College. His mother, Eliza Forbes Hawkes, was born in New Haven, Conn., and was a daughter of William Jehiel Forbes, a well-known real estate owner and shipping merchant of New England. Mr. Hawkes attended the Trinity Church School, Philadelphia, the Hopkins Grammar School, New Haven, the French University Lycées of Tours, and of St. Louis in Paris, where he prepared for the Ecole Polytechnique, Dr. Winneberger's School, at Marburg, Germany, and, returning to N. Y. in 1881, entered Columbia College; was graduated from the School of Mines with the degree of Engineer, 1885; the School of Political Science, 1886, and the School of Law, of which Professor Dwight was then Dean, 1887, being admitted to the Bar in the same year from the office of the late Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, Charles P. Daly; in the sound-money Presidential campaign of 1896 he took an energetic part, and, becoming actively interested in Republican politics, was elected in 1899 first vice-president of the N. Y. County Committee, and in 1900 one of the Republican leaders of N. Y. County; as counsel he has represented important foreign investing interests in American enterprises, many of which have been prominent factors in the development of Western Railroads and industries. As counsel he has also represented security holders in several of the large railroad and other reorganizations. As an authority on admiralty law, as well as engineering and real estate matters and values concerning the water front and port of N. Y., he was selected by Mayor Low for the position of Commissioner of Docks; served in that capacity during the latter's term of office (1902-1903); carried on the Chelsea improvement, the most important piece of water front work undertaken by the City, extending from 23d St. to 12th St., North River, adding over three miles of available dockage space to the city's water front (quick prosecution of the work being made possible by chapter 611 of the Laws of 1902, which he had passed), established the Trunk Line Union Ferry Terminal Centre at W. 23d St.; built the large recreation pier at the foot of Market Slip, East River, and a large number of commercial piers, and devised the first recreation and promenade roof, which was planned for the Jersey Central R. R. bulkhead sheds at Cedar St., North River; pushed the municipalization of the water front in Manhattan and the construction of the river wall; completed the breakwater at the foot of Battery Place; laid out extensive plans for the improvement of the water front in the other Boroughs and made application for the establishment of harbor lines in the Eastchester and other important creeks emptying into N. Y. Harbor, and modification of lines on the Hudson from 23d to 10th Sts. to permit the building of 1,000-foot piers; presented to the Sinking Fund Commission the first plans for municipal ferries from Whitehall St., Manhattan, to 39th St., South Brooklyn, and to St. George, Stapleton and Port Richmond, S. I., and largely increased the water front revenue of N. Y. City (which exceeded $3,000,000 for the year 1902) without raising rates, through changed administrative methods. The Revised Greater N. Y. Charter which went into effect Jan. 1, 1902, abolished the old "Board of Docks," composed of three Commissioners, and substituted in its place a single Commissioner, to which position Mr. Hawkes was the first appointee; he reorganized the inner workings of the Department of Docks and Ferries, dividing it into a Commissioner's Office, Department Secretary's Office, and three bureaus; first, Construction and Repairs; second, Superintendence; third, Accounts; effected marked economies in the cost of supplies, construction and administration. Mr. Hawkes is a member of the Union, Metropolitan, Union League, Republican, Westchester Country, Mid-day and Grolier Clubs, the Bar Association and the Law Institute of the City of N. Y.; of the Society of Cincinnati of the Society of Colonial Wars, the St Nicholas Society, the N. Y. Historical Society, the Maritime Association of the Port of N.
